There are two main reasons for the low of the the rates of foreign exchange. The price of our cotton is exerbitantly high when the difference in exchange is figured. This has raised the price of cotton in the other cotton-producing countries. As a result Europe is using only the cotton that she has to have.

The other cause for the luck of demand is the falling prices in this country and the consequent reluctance of the manufacturers to buy cotton. The mill owners of Massachusetts have curtailed production, running only three or four day a week. They are holding their employes for the stream. for the time when they can run the mill at full capacity but at the same time the owners are trying to meet the problem of falling prices in two ways, by forcing the price of cotton down and by reducing take a reduction in wages they will run the mills full time.
